Understanding Document-Based Assessment in Global History

Document-based assessment (DBA) in global history is a form of evaluation that requires students to analyze and synthesize information from a variety of historical documents. These documents can include letters, speeches, official records, maps, and photographs. The goal is to assess students' ability to interpret primary and secondary sources, make historical connections, and construct coherent arguments based on evidence.

Components of a Document-Based Assessment

A typical document-based assessment consists of several key components:

- Historical Documents: Multiple sources related to a particular historical theme or event.

- Guiding Questions: Prompts that direct students to analyze and compare the documents.
- Essay or Short Answer Task: A writing assignment that requires synthesis of the document information and historical knowledge.

These components work together to test students' critical thinking and writing skills within the context of global history.
