Overview of the St George Family History Center

The St George Family History Center is part of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints' worldwide network of family history centers. It serves the local community and visitors by providing access to genealogical records and expert help. The center is designed to support individuals in discovering their lineage through a comprehensive collection of documents, databases, and other genealogical tools. The facility is staffed by knowledgeable volunteers who assist with research questions and offer guidance on how to navigate genealogical resources effectively. The St George Family History Center also participates in community outreach by hosting workshops and events related to family history research. Its strategic location in St. George makes it accessible to residents of southern Utah and neighboring regions.

History and Mission

The center was established with the mission to preserve family histories and promote genealogical research. St George has a rich pioneer heritage, making the center's role especially significant in preserving regional and family histories. The center aims to provide free access to genealogical records and foster a supportive environment for learning about ancestry. It aligns with the broader mission of the Family History Library system to connect families across generations through shared heritage.

Community Role

Beyond research, the St George Family History Center acts as a hub for genealogical education and community engagement. It offers regular classes and seminars on research techniques, use of digital tools, and understanding historical records. This engagement helps to build genealogical skills throughout the community and encourages preservation of local history.
