The show's visual style and narrative tone contribute to its gripping nature, but these elements also introduce content that requires careful consideration from parents.

Content Ratings and Age Appropriateness

"Tell Me Lies" is rated TV-MA, indicating that it is intended for mature audiences and may not be suitable for viewers under 17. This rating is assigned due to the presence of strong language, sexual content, and intense scenes. Parents should pay close attention to this rating as it signals the need for discretion when allowing younger viewers to watch the series. The TV-MA rating helps guide parents toward making decisions based on their child's maturity level and sensitivity to explicit content.

What TV-MA Means for Parents

TV-MA, or Mature Audience, means the program contains material not suitable for children under 17 years old. It might include harsh language, sexual situations, violence, or substance abuse. Parents should consider these factors carefully when determining viewing permissions. This rating suggests that parental guidance is strongly advised, and in many cases, the content may be inappropriate for teenagers.

Language and Dialogue Concerns

The dialogue in "Tell Me Lies" features frequent strong language and profanity. Swearing and explicit expressions are common throughout the episodes, reflecting the realistic and raw nature of the characters and their interactions. - Occasional sexually explicit language
- Emotional and confrontational dialogue that may be intense

Depiction of Violence and Intensity

Nature of Violent Content

- Occasional depiction of self-harm or distress

Sexual Content and Themes

The series explores mature sexual themes, including intimate relationships, consent issues, and the complexities of young adult romance.
